CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH

Many children who are coping with the aftermath of a disaster in their lives have abnormal reactions as they struggle with the disruption and loss caused by the disaster. Further, family disruptions caused by removal of children from their caregivers result in a great deal of traumatic stress. The Department of Children and Families contracts with mental health providers to provide therapy and wrap around services to children in the dependency system and also in our community. In many cases, children are also placed in therapeutic and specialized therapeutic foster homes to help cope with their mental health needs. Whatever the reason, from a mental health perspective, these services are available to the children in our community.

CHILDREN'S SUBSTANCE ABUSE

The children's substance abuse program office of the Department of Children and Families contracts for programs offering in-home and out-of-home services to children and families with substance abuse problems. Many times parents are placed in residential programs with the intent of having them become better and more responsible parents. The Department also supports the Dependency Drug Court that manages many of these families and also the juveniles as part of the delinquency system.

PREVENTION AND INTERVENTION SERVICES

The Florida Department of Children and Families contracts with many community-based organizations to provide prevention and intervention services to both children in our community and children at risk of abuse and neglect. These services include parenting classes, group and individual counseling, sexual abuse therapy, and homemaker programs. Additionally, some of these services are offered through neighborhood centers thereby allowing easy access for children and families.
